Before the installation of a solar water pump by Human Appeal, I used to fill water from a well which was far away from my house. I used to fill water two to three times a day and it used to take three to four hours to fill the water but after the installation of the solar power water pump it takes only a few minutes to fill the water as the solar water pump is near my house.

MOHAMED ASHMAWEY, chief executive of international aid charity HUMAN APPEAL, explains the galvanising effect of a Charity Commission inquiry - particularly in relation to transparency, clarity of purpose and organisational structure - and describes the start of a striking new project in the United States.

Human Appeal is a fully independent British development and relief charity based in Manchester, UK. It was established in 1981, and runs targeted poverty relief programmes in collaboration with global organisations like the United Nations. Our purpose is to save lives through emergency response and sustainable development programmes, across over 25 countries worldwide.

The Charity Commission is seeing a lot more media interest at the moment, having announced its investigation into the financial dealings of the Captain Tom Moore charity, among others. Indeed, in 2021, the body investigated well over 2,800 charities for their compliance, a number which is on the rise. We should know - we were one of them.

Being investigated by the Charity Commission is not something you would think that any charity would seek out. Except we did, self-reporting that a hijacking incident had occurred beyond our control while operating in a war zone, and a separate incident where a warehouse in Syria was raided by a proscribed group.

The work the Commission undertakes is vital for the wider charity sector to be able to operate effectively and continue to help as many people as possible, both domestically and overseas. Obviously, news of a compliance audit of this type may not be on many charities' wish list. And yet, as one of the UK's fastest growing charities, and with a new leadership team in place, we recognised that swift growth may have left certain operational areas in need of some review.

Maintaining stakeholder trust

Aside from the potential damage to the solid reputation of a respected 30-year-old UK-legal institution, which Charity Commission scrutiny brought, the other key challenge for us during this process was maintaining the trust of our stakeholders, some of whom were understandably surprised by the inquiry.

The survey also found that 35 per cent of respondents expect to increase their giving again this year.

Last year
(2021) we provided
2,504,868
million people
with access to clean, safe water.

So, how can we help?

HUMAN APPEAL is on a mission to save lives, alleviate poverty, transform and empower local communities.

WHAT HUMAN APPEAL IS DOING
Human Appeal has been working since 1991, we've been providing clean water solutions from deep water wells to large scale desalination plants.

Sponsor a village in Tharparkar

When you sponsor a village, you help lots of families live a healthy and clean life with safe drinking water, food, and more of what they need to have better opportunity.

Donate a Water Well

When you donate a well, you are giving communities a chance at a bright future, by making it possible for children to go to school, for parents to earn a living, and for women and girls to live safely and securely in their villages.

HERE FOR EVERY HUMAN

A high-angle photograph of a diverse group of children and adults. In the center, several hands are joined together in a circle, palms facing up. The children are wearing colorful clothing, including blue, orange, and yellow. Purple square confetti is scattered throughout the scene, falling from the top. The background is a plain, light-colored surface.

THANK YOU

Welcome to the Human Appeal family.
